A UK woman has been caught allegedly watching an episode of popular TV series MasterChef in her car while driving down a busy motorway.

The incident, uploaded to Facebook and YouTube yesterday by user Luke Page, has already gone viral, accumulating almost 108,000 shares on Facebook alone.

It shows what appears to be someone filming behind the wheel before getting out of the car to confront the other driver.

“Are you watching TV?” a voice can be heard saying.

“It looks like you're watching TV to me darling – you know that's illegal, don't you?”

The video was allegedly filmed on the A127, a major arterial road between London and Essex.

The fact the cameraperson may have been driving at the same time has also sparked debate online.

“Oh wow. If you hadn't been filming this on your phone yourself, I'd [sic] say show it to the police - ridiculous!!!” Facebook user Ivon Evlogieva said.

“If you're going to upload footage about an errant road user, then you have to ensure that you are not doing anything wrong yourself,” said YouTube user 4ChordsNoNet.

“That's a £100 fine, three points on your licence and a CU80 (driving record offence) endorsement.”

Mr Page responded by pointing out that that there is nothing in the video that indicts him personally or proves that the camera person was also the driver.

“Anyway there's no implication that I even took a video. You can't see the cameraman's face or car. It's all conjecture,” he said.
